(June 14, 2022) – Today, Bleachers released the short film How Dare You Want More.

The short film serves as a sequel to 2015's award-winning thank you and sorry, taking place entirely at Electric Lady Studios and out now on Bleachers' YouTube channel. Created and written by Jack Antonoff and director/producer Bill Benz (At Home with Amy Sedaris, Kroll Show, Portlandia), the film stars Jack Antonoff, Zoë Chao, Rachel Antonoff, Bob Balaban, Ana Gasteyer, and more.

Accompanying the release of the film is a special 2-pack of remixed tracks from their critically acclaimed 2021 album, Take the Sadness Out of Saturday Night.

Out now via RCA Records, the bundle features a remix of “Stop Making This Hurt” from PC Music producer A. G. Cook and a reimagining of “How Dare You Want More” from Earth, Wind & Fire founding member and bassist, Verdine White.

Take the Sadness Out of Saturday Night serves as the follow-up to their critically acclaimed second album, Gone Now, which came out on June 2nd, 2017. The first single, “Don’t Take The Money,” hit #3 at Alternative Radio, while The New York Times called Bleachers’ music “anthemic life-affirming pop-rock.” Six-time Grammy® Award-winning singer, songwriter, musician, and producer, Jack Antonoff, is the creative force behind Bleachers. In April 2022, Antonoff won the Grammy Award for Producer of the Year.

Bleachers are currently performing across the globe as part of their 2022 How Dare You Want Tour, with stops at The Forum in Los Angeles, Red Rocks in Denver, and Radio City Music Hall in New York, as well as festival appearances at Bonnaroo, Riot Fest, All Things Go, and more. With support from Beabadoobee, Blu DeTiger, Cavetown, Charly Bliss, The Lemon Twigs, Wolf Alice, and more, Bleachers will also join Carly Rae Jepsen for a set of special co-headlining dates in Cleveland and Toronto this fall. Tickets are on sale now, for more information visit <http://bleachersmusic.com/#tour>.

About Bleachers

On July 30th, 2021, Bleachers released their highly anticipated third album Take the Sadness Out of Saturday Night via RCA Records. Kicking off 2022, Bleachers made their debut performance on NBC's Saturday Night Live, performing two songs, including their new single "How Dare You Want More," to mark the seminal show's first episode of the year.

Offering up the first taste of new music in late 2020, they previewed the album with a series of singles including "Chinatown" ft. Bruce Springsteen and "45," followed by "Stop Making This Hurt," which received a 'Best Alternative Video' nomination at the 2021 MTV VMAs, hit #1 at Triple A and top ten at Alternative radio.

Associated Press called the project "terrific," while Entertainment Weekly deemed it "a canny commingling of indie-pop jangle and unabashed arena rock," and Rolling Stone praised its "rock and roll thrillers with punchy pop pleas." Known as one of the best live acts in the world, this past fall, Bleachers hit the road for their sold-out 'Take the Sadness Out of Saturday Night' headline tour, a multi-city run across North America.

Take the Sadness Out of Saturday Night serves as the follow-up to their critically acclaimed second album, Gone Now, which came out on June 2nd, 2017. The first single, "Don't Take The Money," hit #3 at Alternative Radio, while The New York Times called Bleachers' music "anthemic life-affirming pop-rock." Six-time Grammy® Award-winning singer, songwriter, musician, and producer, Jack Antonoff, is the creative force behind Bleachers. In April 2022, Antonoff won the Grammy Award for Producer of the Year.
